SCHOOL-GIRL'S CRUSH

TEEN-AGE LOVE

WHEN I WROTE TOMMY, I TOLD HIM I WAS BEING CHILDISH-- HIS ANSWER WAS WONDERFUL-- KIND, AND THOUGHTFUL! I DIDN'T REALLY EXPECT HIM TO ANSWER.

HE ASKED ME TO DATE THE THREE MOST ATTRACTIVE MEN I KNEW-- THEN TO WRITE AND TELL HIM I'D FORGOTTEN ALL ABOUT HIM? I WILL...

I TRIED... I HONESTLY TRIED TO LIKE JUD THAT NIGHT/ OH, I LIKE HIM WELL ENOUGH, BUT THAT WAS ALL...

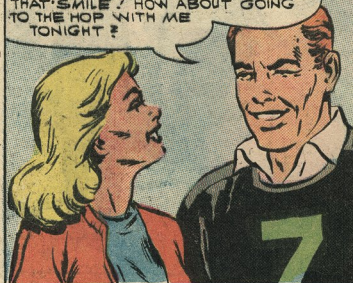

YOU'RE LOVELY, WENDY! WHEN I'M NEAR YOU I...

STOP, JUD! IT'S NO USE!

TOMMY HAD ASKED ME TO TRY IT-- SO I SMILED AT JUD MARLEY! JUD REACTED TO THE SMILE INSTANTLY...

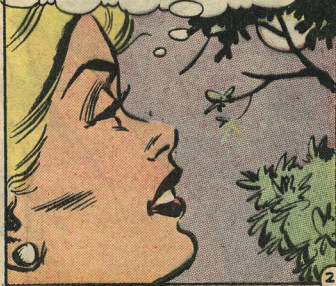

HONEY, I'VE BEEN WAITING FOR THAT SMILE! HOW ABOUT GOING TO THE HOP WITH ME TONIGHT?

I FIGURED YOU WERE GONE ON SOMEONE ELSE, WENDY! WHO IS IT? TED MORSE, THE CAMPUS GENIUS? MAYBE STANLEY WINTERS, HE'S A SERIOUS TYPE!

NEITHER, JUD! BUT YOU GAVE ME TWO FINE LEADS!

WHEREVER YOU ARE, TOMMY, I WANT YOU TO KNOW I'M TRYING! I DON'T WANT TO HAVE A KID'S CRUSH ON YOU-- IT'S NOT FAIR FOR EITHER OF US!

TEEN-AGE LOVE

LOVING TOMMY FROM AFAR AS I HAD FOR SO LONG. I MISSED A LOT OF THE FUN AND TEEN-AGED ROMANCE THE OTHER GIRLS HAD -- BUT I'D NEVER REGRETTED IT FOR A MINUTE ...

WENDY, WHERE DO YOU GET THE PICTURES? TOMMY DIDN'T GIVE THAT ONE TO YOU, DID HE?

NO, HIS SISTER DID! I KNOW HIS FAMILY WELL -- THEY KNOW HOW I FEEL AND WE ALL LAUGH ABOUT IT! THEY'VE INVITED ME DOWN FOR THE FIRST WEEK AFTER I GRADUATE.

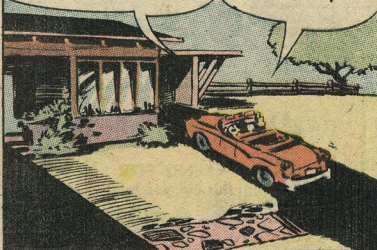

I GRADUATED AND CAUGHT A TRAIN IMMEDIATELY AFTERWARD. TOMMY'S SISTER MET ME AT THE STATION ...

I'D BETTER TELL YOU SO THE SHOCK WON'T BE TOO BAD!

TELL ME WHAT? IS TOMMY ALL RIGHT? WHAT IS IT?

HE'S HOME! HE'S HERE -- RIGHT IN THIS HOUSE!

OH, BEA-- REALLY?

TEEN-AGE LOVE

NURSE KNOWS

Mrs. Anna Barnett, R.N., who was supervisor of Section A, Ward B, in Centerport General Hospital had a worried look on her face. Not that this was anything unusual, for her duties were just one continuous round of headaches. She glanced down at the notation pad and read half aloud to herself:

"Alice Rosen called. She can't take the night shift. Her little boy is ill. We tried to contact Mary Lennon. No answer. You will have to shift one of the ward nurses to room 249 for the night shift.

The laboratory called. Said they were running short of Type B positive. They are contacting the hospital at Sands Point.

Dr. Gershwine was injured in a car accident. Dr. Postman will take his place in the ward for the morning duty."

But these were just the usual round of worries. The look on her face was slightly different. She sat down on her hard chair. She didn't like an easy chair for there was always the temptation to fall asleep even with the eyes wide open. She was worried in a different way. She was thinking to herself:

"Should I say something to Marcia Veit? After all, I am old enough to be her mother. Somebody has to do it. I remember the day she first came here for her nurses' training course. How hard she studied. How happy she was when we capped her.

It's wonderful to be young, happy, and full of ambition. But why does she have to wear her heart on her uniform? Every person in the hospital knows she is in love with Dr. Collins. I know her heart will be broken. He just regards it as another flirtation. That combination of good looks and money is too much for Dr. Collins. But would it do any good if I warned her? She might tell me to mind my own business?"

Suddenly Mrs. Barnett looked up. There was an old woman with a box in her hand. She recognized her as the woman who had been in the hospital the past week for a general check up.

"How are you feeling, Mrs. Lynch?" she asked.

"Much better," smiled the old woman. "I tried to find Miss Veit but they told me she was out. I have a present for her. Will you give it to her for me? I put in a little card of thanks. She was so kind and helpful to me when I was here. I will never forget her.

She's so nice and young. And anybody can see she is in love. I do hope she gets the man and that he is in love with her. She will make a fine bride and mother."

Mrs. Barnett took the package and the little old woman turned around and slowly headed for the elevator. The buzzer rang and showed number 267.

"Rose," called Mrs. Barnett to one of the two nurses nearby, "see what Mrs. Simpson wants in 267. Poor woman. She hasn't had a visitor for two days."

"You're wrong," smiled Rose Kandel. "Marcia spent an hour each day with her on her time off. Even bought her a box of candy and some flowers."

John Eckers, supervisor of the hospital, took one look at the large amount of correspondence that had piled up on his desk and just shuddered a bit. Everybody expected personal attention. Next month there would be the meeting in St. Louis. He had to prepare an address on "General Efficiency in the Modern Hospital." But that could wait. Something more important was on his mind.

"I remember young Collins when he first entered medical school," he thought to himself. "Never figured he would last. Money and good looks seemed to me to be too much for him. But he got through and then came here for his internship.

How all those young nurses sighed when they saw him for the first time. Maybe he should have been an actor in Hollywood. I can't figure out why he studied medicine? With all that money he could have a wonderful time.

But what am I going to do about Marcia Veit? She's so in love with him that she is headed for a heartbreak. So he has taken her out a few times. There are no secrets in a hospital. But does he love her? That's the million dollar question. I know his mother very well. She wants him to marry a society girl. Mentioned something about Claire Gallanty. I see her horse took first prize in the show yesterday.

I can't just sit back and do nothing? But on the other hand what can I really do?"

And so John Eckers picked up the first letter and started to read it. It was hard to concentrate. He pressed the button for his secretary to come in. There was work to be done in running a hospital.

The staff restaurant was not yet opened for the evening meal. However around one of the big tables there were seated four nurses.

"I am going to tell Marcia what she ought to know," began Mary Littwin. "She's so in love she can't even cross a street in safety. Does she have to assume that just because she has fallen for a doctor that he too is madly in love with her? I think I ought to know men. A man is a vain creature. He's flattered when a female shows the colors of her heart. But soon he gets sick and tired of it. He wants to be the one to decide who is in love with whom. He wants to be the one to do the chasing. You can see she is going to end up with a broken heart."

"And never get over it," interrupted Jane Purcell. "She's just the type who will only love one man. There will never be another man in the world for her. So that means she will be an old maid and devote herself for the rest of her life to nursing. Just like Henrietta Davenport. They say she swore she would never get married when the man she loves married somebody else."

Nursing is a fine profession. You can be a good nurse and also be a good wife. That's what Bill said to me last week. We plan to be married in June. I didn't want to quit and he told me to go right ahead. He makes enough money with the gas station to support both of us."

"With Dr. Collins' money there will never be a question of counting the spare change," advised Lillian Hartman. "Won't it be wonderful if they just both got married and lived happy ever and after. Just like in that novel I finished reading. Oh, why can't life be the same way as in a good love novel. You get your man in the end. Then everybody is satisfied."

"I read something about Dr. Collins and this society girl in yesterday's newspaper," added

Agnes Scott. "I get a kick out of following Tom Coran's column in the paper. He knows everybody who is anybody in high society. He figures they will get married. I just hope that Marcia didn't head the column."

In the waiting room next to the laboratory were two young internes. Dr. Sun Yat-Sing had learned a lot about the American ways. But still he was puzzled.

"Miss Veit is one nice fine good girl. Dr. Collins looks like one smart man. She is in love with him. Now what happens? I would like to know. In this country you feel that love is very important. In my country you marry the girl that your parents pick. And the girl marries the man her parents pick. You see, the parents get together. Many good marriages are made that way. Why is love so big?"

"I wish I knew how to explain it," replied Dr. Howard Better. "Maybe that's the way we are. Next year I will get married. But I am in love with my girl and she is in love with me. Somehow the idea of marrying a person you don't love is something not in my make-up. That's all I can do. I can't explain it any other way. We have an expression that 'Love Makes the World Go Round.'"

"This I do not understand," sadly admitted Dr. Sun Yat-Sing. "Only I learn that love here is the most important factor with young people."

Suddenly three gongs rang in quick succession. That was a signal for everybody to get next to an inter-com loud speaker. Something important was going to be broadcasted. So, soon, every staff member, every nurse and every employee had their ears ready to hear what was going to be said.

"I have something to tell you," began the familiar voice of John Eckers, supervisor of the hospital. "The restaurant will open a half hour earlier and it will close two hours later. Eat whatever you so desire. There will be no charge."

"There will be a big wedding cake on the center table. Mrs. Dooley will cut it and give you each a piece. Dr. Collins called to say that he and Marcia Veit were married an hour ago. I gave him a special leave of absence for himself and wife. They will be back after a two week honeymoon."

"Then there will be a reception at his home given by his mother. She gave her blessings to both of them. Now I hope you are all happy and satisfied. And will the females please refrain from shedding tears of joy? We have a hospital to run and I am certain that from now on things will be normal."

There was a minute break and then the voice continued and finished, "Until two more people fall in love. I guess this is the way of life."
